Not illustrated. 1883 Excerpt: .was forty, to learn to read, just to read the word of God. She toiled away most patiently, spelling out chapter after chapter, when even her own children at times laughed amiably at the endeavor, as if it were a hopeless one. In time she committed to memory two or three entire chapters of John s Gospel, and some of the most precious promises, which she took great comfort in repeating during her last illness, after she became too weak for the effort of reading. She was received into the church about the time she began to learn to read; and though disease soon began to undermine her constitution, and her years of service for the Master were soon numbered, they were years of decided growth and of fidelity in standing up for Jesus as she had opportunity. In spite of the cough that attends consumption, she was an earnest teacher of the gospel to the poor, ignorant women of the lias Beirut sewing-class, just as long as she had strength to meet with them. They always met at her house, and through all the months that she was confined to her bed she would not allow the suspension of the class, though others felt that even their noise in an adjoining room was too much for her. It was in her sick-room the most impressive lessons were taught by her. According to the custom of the country, and in compliance with her wish to spare...
