Excerpt: . . . parchment Grew dazzling to his gaze, -There, in its very centre-Among a host of rays-A hand of wondrous beauty Before the scribe was laid, -The letters paled beneath it, He saw the ink-streams fade. That hand! no pulse was beating Under its silvery hue, While, in the gloom beside him, The quaking clerk could trace A human outline bending---A womans pleading face! A form of moonlike brightness, . -Clothed in an opal mist, A face like wan, white flowers, No sunbeam ever kissed; She lookd so strangely distant, And yet she felt so near; Vague, in her shadowy lustre, -Fair, but a thing of fear! Her voice--the young clerk heard it-And with his heart he heard, Those tones the founts of being In their deep centre stirrd! I am that young childs mother, Him thy swift pen would wrong, The angels took me early-Earth...
