It had a 1197-1210 much wider meaning then than now. All the i. 305 fee of Richerus of Arnall consisted of two plough fields, but their extent was such that they occupied all the parish between its opposite boundaries. MM Plots of land were enclosed by means of iii. 17a ditches. At Rowth, when the ditch between the marsh and the cultivated land was defective, the beasts from the marsh invaded the corn lands and meadows blada et pratd) and did great damage. It was customary when the Gayre = a measure of land. Garricae = uncultivated land. corn had been reaped and the hay gathered, to turn animals to pasture on the enclosed lands, as on Kerrydales at Rowth. Every plough land had so much pasture or rights of common that went with it, oxen being necessary for ploughing...
